Within the realm of the ancient Maya kingdoms of Belize, the key to the riddle of life is sought and found-- and it is death. With the Red Dragon's refusal to float another dime of American debt, the country teeters precariously at the rim of the fiscal equivalent of a black hole. The nation's single source for medical care, ARLNAT, struggles to confront its sacrosanct requirement: it must meet its mandated bottom line at all costs. Kabuki accounting and poorly disguised rationing are not being ignored by the new Congress. No friend of socialized medicine, the chairman of the senate Special Committee on Aging learns that something may be wrong with ARLNAT's new anti-viral wonder drug, Sisacane. An ally, NIH Director Phillip Quester, advises against any sort of regulatory formality in approaching the drug's Belizean manufacturer. In his Bethesda fiefdom, Quester has the perfect asset for the task: an intelligent, fetching and unintimidating young doctor. As she has in the past, Ginny Blaine is certain to put business first, even when risk abounds. Armed with an innocuous cover, she heads to Belize to sneak a peek under Xibalba Pharmaceuticals tent. But someone else is also hunting in Corozal, a Cayman Islander sniffing the money trails leading from ARLNAT to the private pockets of the top dogs of Xibalba Pharmaceuticals Limited. Brash conman Eddy Logan, crosses swords with Blaine as he works his mark, Xibalba's Wizard of Oz, or so he believes. But Logan badly needs Blaine's inside scoop--if he can persuade her to talk. Ginny enlists Glen Cannon to help in assessing genetic materials she filches from a...
