Excerpt: . . . saving to be effected must be by utilising reserve plant at an equally favourable load; but to do this the restriction must not only be as to the hours overlapping, but also in the event of breakdown of plant. This restriction I cannot conceive to be acceptable to any consumer, no matter how accommodating he may be to the ideals of the station engineer. To my mind the whole argument must be in the question, Can we reasonably hope to find a class of consumer who is willing to accept supply only at such time as it is convenient for the undertakers to give it If so, then I for one am willing to consider the question of giving such a supply at a price equivalent to the value of the load obtained, which would certainly not be based on Mr. Taylors system of...
