OCLC Number: (OCLOC)38047455 Subject: Customs administration -- United States -- Evaluation. Excerpt: . . . B-260120 after traveling in a nonexempt area and passengers on certain Caribbean cruises that docked at a nonexempt port - and later docked at an exempt PUF. port - were exempt from the According to sea carrier industry association officials, exemptions from the PUF were not clearly defined, thus leading to their misinterpretation. For example, sea carriers did not know how their cruise itineraries, especially those with multiple ports of call (including calls at more than one U. S. port), were affected by these exemptions because Customs had not provided any guidance about exemptions. Furthermore, the association officials were concerned that Customs interpreted exemptions in ways that would generate additional revenues. These officials used the following hypothetical example to illustrate their concern. A cruise originates in Miami, Florida; stops in San Juan, Puerto Rico; and proceeds to ports in the Caribbean Sea before returning to Miami. The officials claimed that according to Customs, a passenger on this cruise can be PUF when arriving in San Juan and again for returning assessed the (arriving in) to Miami. However, the association officials believed that PUF should not apply to the arrival in San Juan because there was no the Customs inspection at that port. Customs officials responded that the issue of assessing the PUF more than once is a matter of differing interpretations between the sea carrier industry and Customs. According to Customs interpretation, the user fee shall be collected for each arrival at a PUF statute clearly states that the U. S. port...
